Whene'er an anxious group is seen
Around some monthly magazine
Or paper that is daily whirled
To every quarter of the world,
And merry peals of laughter rise
As this or that attracts the eyes,
The smiling crowd, you may depend,
Above some illustrations bend
That advertise the strength and scope
And purity of Ivory Soap.

But while they smile or praise bestow
The fact should still be kept in mind
That people of the knowing kind
Will heed the hints or lessons laid
In rhymes and pictures thus displayed,
And let no precious moments fly
Until the UNORY SOAP they try,
And prove on garments coarse and fine,
The truth of every sketch and line,

Frank Lindon, will appear at Hol-

A soldier on duty has to act prompt-to be unimportant to morals, would ly and without much thought of conso-quences, and I have met men used to letter, and its note of intense, though danger who were constantly doing vio-lent acts as a result of their habit of are scores of letters breathing that life. A word and a blow expresses the spirit, though usually expressed with attitude of such men, and it expresses much more clausiness, and, to use the self-preservative reflex violence, but some do not, and some return to this lower level from age or disease. It has been called instinctive violence because of its relation to self-preservation among the lower animals. This state can not be studied alone, and I have found some heip to understanding it in comparing it with some other states in which nervous instaltive, nervous persons suffer tortures from being placed on heights or near rapidly-moving objects, such as railway trains. We are nearly all of us civilized enough and nervous enough to know something of the feeling, but the intensity of the feeling is only known to the truly nervous; to similar persons a suggestion of one kind or another stimulates immediately to an act, just as the presence on the top of a tower suggests the idea of precipation from its summit. Though a man knows the value of his life and may be in the full enjoyment of health and forture, the inherited nervousness of the feeling is only known to the truly nervous; to similar persons a suggestion of one kind or another stimulates immediately to an act, just as the presence on the top of a tower suggests the idea of precipation from its summit. Though a man knows the value of his life and may be in the full enjoyment of health and forture, the inherited nervousness as there are in England the immense majority, and to judge from these letters, they have no more intention of attacking the marriage laws, as far as their main principle of caveat emptor, or the rule that a jury should consist of twelve. They have, in fact, never considered marriage as an institution like any other, but as a hustinution like any other, but has a their main principle of caveat emptor, or the rule that a jury should consist of twelve. They have of agitating against the principle of caveat emptor, or the rule that a jury should consist of twelve. They have of agitating against the principle of caveat e may be in the full enjoyment of health forty, a threat of divorce would be like and fortune, the inherited nervousness makes him unsafe on a height or near a railway line. In the same way a man may be detingly fond of wife or family, and yet their presence at once conjures up a feeling that he must kill them; he does not attempt to explain it, he only says he feels that he will do it. No threats can strengthen his like the density of their mass but, and fortune, the inherited pervousness a sentence of slow death-or what the do it.
